There are 4 different builders in our subdivision "Lone Mountain". We should not have to paint our out-facing walls based on our HOA board's "opinion". It is wrong to demand ALL homeowners paint their out-facing walls the same color (pepperspice). Our out-facing walls have been the same color as our home for 13 years from our builder "Lennar".

There is an extensive history. It begins with an assertion, based on zero evidence, that somehow this mandate increases property values and proceeds through various stages of increasing overreach to the present day. At no time were the affected homeowners inputs solicited.

I can tell you this Association is heavy handed and if there is a complicated expensive way to resolve a problem they will choose that method. All the board members except Keith Sutcliffe need to be removed. Former board member Steven Eric Haney was removed, in our experience with him he exhibited "stalkerish" tendencies.

It is a ridiculous mandate

Into compliance just because in the past, the HOA continuously adds late fees, even when we are pending having our issue Herd at a meeting and I really didn't feel like paying extra money so I painted the wall however the photo that they took of the wall where they find us appears to have been taken after we painted the wall

We were one of the last to paint our walls after petitioning the HOA and being denied. We strongly believe that the HOA has overstepped their authority.

We were forced to repaint our wall that was painted the main color of our house that was approved in 2021. We went through the process of appeal and we were still forced to repaint the wall Pepper Spice or incur fines.

The Lone Mountain HOA's mandate to force homeowners to paint their front facing walls Behr Pepper Spice was made arbitrarily, and without input from homeowners or consultation with design professionals. It disproportionately affects the 42% of Lone Mountain homeowners with Lennar homes whose front facing yard walls are stuccoed and painted to match the home. The builder's design intent was to make the wall appear as an extension of the house. The other homes in the development have bare block walls that are painted pepper spice. In this case, painting the front yard walls a color different than the house makes sense since the material of the fence is different than the house. Also, pepper spice clashes with several colors on the Lennar color palette, which diminishes the home's curb appeal.

I feel the board is acting way beyond its duties.

COMMENTS: Into compliance just because in the past, the HOA continuously adds late fees, even when we are pending having our issue Herd at a meeting and I really didn't feel like paying extra money so I painted the wall however the photo that they took of the wall where they find us appears to have been taken after we painted the wall

COMMENTS: We should follow what the builder, with good taste and rightly so, painted the houses well and the wall belongs to the house. I like what the builder did - they had GOOD TASTE.
